Tennis Star Madison Keys Announces Support for Andrea Jaeger's Little Star Foundation

Posted by Madison Keys:

I'm so excited that the recent launch of Kindness Wins has brought even more kindness into my inbox! Last week, former tennis player Andrea Jaeger reached out to me about a campaign her organization, Little Star Foundation, is running now through March 8th to help kids on their mission of 1 million Kindness votes to bring more kindness to the world. I love it!

Madison Keys spreading kindness on and off the tennis court

American Madison Keys is launching her "Kindness Wins" initiative, hoping to make the world a little brighter, one act of kindness at a time. ESPNW Writer D'Arcy Maine, Feb 18, 2020 ESPN Article Excerpts Madison Keys has seen the dark side of the internet. Like so many of her peers, she has received more hateful messages and comments than she can count. The tennis star has talked openly about it over the years and has even previously shared some of the abuse she has encountered on social media. However, Keys also knows what the internet is like at its best. Keys new initiative, Kindness Wins will have an active web and social media presence, looks to partner with other similarly minded groups, as well as recognizing, amplifying and providing grants and support to people who are making the world a better place. "I would describe it as a collaboration of people who want to spread kindness," she said. Known as a fierce competitor on the court, Keys will be focused on making the United States Olympic team for Tokyo over the next few months. "I 100% hope my peers will join this because I think it makes it all the more powerful," she said. Keys is currently ranked No. 12 in the world. Keys, the reigning Cincinnati Open champion and a US Open finalist in 2017, will be in action in Mexico before playing in Indian Wells, California, Miami and Charleston, South Carolina. That last tournament, the Volvo Car Open in early April, will be the site of Kindness Wins' first official event.

"The message is really, 'Let's be nice to each other.' I know that sounds small, but I really don't think it is," she said. "Every day online, and in person, we're constantly seeing people being so disrespectful and nasty to one another, but we want to promote and magnify people being good to each other, in the hopes that will encourage more of this type of behavior."

Professional Tennis Player and knighted by the Queen of England, Sir Andy Murray has announced Little Star Foundation to his millions of Facebook followers.

I met Andy Murray, his brother Jamie and other very young children from Dunblane's School in 1996 when I traveled to help the students and community recover from the horrific school shooting. Back in 1996 school shootings were not the norm. Immediately after reading 16 small children and one teacher were shot and killed at their Primary School I contacted the Dunblane school offering my services free of charge explaining how sports and art therapy could help the children, families and school heal from the tragedy.

The Dunblane School and Community were grateful for my offer and accepted it graciously. Little Star Foundation's Programs are designed specifically for despair and heartbreak to transform into hope, care, kindness and support. Sadness and hate can be healed to rise purposefully into meaningful change, goodness and success.
